2.2.1 - The institution assesses the learning levels of the students and organizes special Programmes for advanced learners and slow learners.

Identification of slow and advanced learners is aided by academic performance and ongoing assessment. To meet their demands, many strategies are used.

They are as follows:

Some departments regularly hold tests and tutorials. Students are informed of their performance on such exams and tutorials.

Subjects Identification:

The curriculum is used in subjects that are thought to be challenging for the average student.

The respective departments have been given instructions to use the slow learner tactics created by IQAC.

The program was successful because the slow learners in the targeted group performed better in the exams.

Based on their performance in the relevant subject examinations and interactions with the teachers, it is advised that all departments guide advanced students.

IQAC recommends following activities under this scheme:

1. Planning visits to libraries
2. Issuing books from the departmental library
3. Encouraging pupils to take part in competitions, tests, or other events
4. Giving advanced students access to research journals
5. Providing internet access and a list of websites with information on the subject.
6. Executing surveys, projects, etc.

Outcome:

The students enrolled in the remedial coaching program have successfully completed their university exams, while the advanced students have performed better.
